Chapter 1 by Captain

The cabin was dirty, the vines climbed up it and arched into the sky, creating an eerie darkness

Chapter 2 by -

Cobwebs clung to the walls like the smell of death to a corpse. Rats scavenged about the wooden planks and darted across the floor.

It was not the cabin that presented such strangeness, as the rotting door which lay embedded in the corner. This was situated upon the ground. But one could only open it with a key.

And that key lay strapped about the pale neck of a woman. A rigid form which lay lifeless on the bed. A bed whose covers were once starched and bleached white. But were now crusted with dried blood. Soaked with the life of a beautiful maiden...
